Even though some artists are stepping away from Wynwood, the neighborhood is hardly losing out. A tech scene and an upstart business culture are moving in, with rumors that Facebook is exploring office space. With young entrepreneurship comes the young professional's drink of choice: beer. Wynwood Brewing Company has led the charge, while companies such as J. Wakefield Brewing and Concrete Beach Brewery have just opened their doors. Boxelder Craft Beer Market has honed in on the retail side, selling craft beer to thirsty consumers. "The people who brew beer are creative, fascinating people," says Nicole Darnell, who owns Boxelder with her husband, Adam. "It's the same as artists. Wynwood is the perfect place for that level of creativity." On Collins Avenue, Bagatelle Miami will bring its popular high-energy, Champagne-filled brunch scene from Los Angeles and New York to the Sunshine State
